

THE POLITICIANS AND THE MEDIA SCREAM: "THEY WEREN'T RACE RIOTS!" BUT ASK YOURSELF THIS: WOULD BRITAIN HAVE BURNED WITHOUT THE BLACK INVASION?

THE LONG FUSE

THE EXPLOSIONS of violence in the multi-racial districts of numerous cities in England this year were not detonated by a short fuse. The fuse started to be laid 33 years ago when the first British Nationality Act became law in 1948.

That law — which gave notional 'British citizenship' to a fifth of the world's population — was jointly endorsed by the Labour government of the day and by the Conservative and Liberal 'opposition'.

The British public was told that the law was intended merely as a symbolic gesture, a sentimental link between Britain and the countless millions of former subjects of the British Empire who were in process of becoming citizens of independent Commonwealth nations.

The British people were not told that this 'sentimental gesture' would become the means whereby their nation would be converted into a multi-racial society.

Indeed, the British people were not told by the Parliamentary parties in their election manifestos or by the mass media that their nation's racial homogeneity was to be destroyed until steadily but unpublicised mass immigration over a period of more than a decade had established the multi-racial society as a fait accompli.

racism was finally admitted as a fact by Parliament in 1965 when the first of the notorious Race Relations Acts was passed.

The clear purpose of this Act was to try and force the White majority to 'integrate' with the immigrants and to intimidate into silence those who expressed strong opposition to race-mixing.

This law, and its two successors, proved to be counter-productive. It confirmed in many White people's minds the belief that the endless flow of immigrants was the product of a conspiracy to destroy the British nation.

This in turn galvanised an increase of open and organised opposition to immigration and race-mixing which in turn reinforced feelings of resentment by the immigrant community.

DANGER SIGNALS

Despite all the danger signals, successive Labour and Conservative governments allowed yet more immigrants to flood in.

This situation would have been an unbearable strain even for a relatively prosperous society. But post-war Britain entered a period of industrial decline consequent upon the break-up of the Empire and the resultant loss of secure sources of raw materials and protected export markets.

In 1950 Britain's share of the world's export trade in manufactured goods was 25 per cent. By 1977 this had fallen to 9 per cent.

In 1955 only 5 per cent of manufactured goods sold in Britain were imported. By 1975 that figure had risen to 28 per cent.

INDUSTRIAL DECAY

In 1950 'only' 300,000 people were unemployed in Britain. Today 3 million people are on the dole.

In these circumstances Britain had not generated the wealth to reorganise and re-equip its wealth-producing industrial base, and thus has been unable to solve urban decay and housing problems inherited from the pre-war period.

Thus the injection of a racial problem into a society already suffering from chronic economic and industrial decay was an act of criminal insanity (or deliberate treason) which could only result in explosions of violence.

And the worst is yet to be.

"MULTI-RACIAL" RIOTS—THE GIFT OF A MULTI-RACIAL SOCIETY

THE propaganda campaign to persuade the British public that the recent eruptions of violence in numerous cities were "not race riots" was better organised than the Police campaign to drive the rioters off the streets.

It is true that many (though not all) the riots involved 'racially integrated' mobs — but that heavily over-worked fact does not disprove our contention that the disorders were generated in the first instance by the growing determination of groups within the West Indian and Asian communities to make war on White society by means of mob violence.

The underlying racial factor in all the riots may be established by an honest answer to the question: "Would the riots have taken place had there been no mass Coloured Immigration into Britain?" The answer to that question must be "No!"

In the case of every city where serious rioting took place, the trouble began in areas notorious for the huge size of their Immigrant population: Brixton, Southall and Walthamstow in London; Toxteth in Liverpool; Moss Side in Manchester; Highfields in Leicester; Chapeltown in Leeds; Handsworth in Birmingham.

The White Trash who rioted and looted were not politically motivated. They were merely criminal opportunists exploiting a disaster. An earthquake would have served them just as well as the catastrophe of Immigration.

NF News seeks to persuade its readers to feel angry about the evils of multi-racialism and to direct their anger solely at the corrupt politicians who created a racial problem in Britain, and not to the Immigrant population in general. "Racialism" is NOT unlawful — only "racial hatred".

LIVERPOOL: Nowhere was the rioting more ferocious than in the Immigrant area of Toxteth, Liverpool, on the 4th and 5th of July. Here we see the Police retreating in disorder from an almost wholly Black mob. The Black rioter on the right is going into a captured Police riot shield. Rioting later broke out in the Dingle (Irish) area of the city.

SOUTHALL: Two Sikhs stroll contentedly by the gutted Hambrough Tavern, Southall, on 5th July — the day after a mob of 1,000 Asians armed with petrol bombs ambushed 300 Skinheads attending a rock concert at the pub.

BIRMINGHAM: "Instant Credit" says the poster on the window of a hi-fi and camera shop in Birmingham city centre. The Asians and Blacks who looted the shop on 12th July are evidently delighted with the merchandise — and the credit terms.

WALTHAMSTOW: When Asians rioted, looting rampage in Walthamstow, East London, on 11th July they met with stout resistance from local White traders who armed themselves appropriately to defend their shops.

MORE WHITE VICTIMS OF RACIAL ATTACKS

MULTI-RACIALISTS attempt to excuse outbreaks of violence by immigrants by maintaining a propaganda deluge about "racial attacks" — by Whites on immigrants.

But racial attacks on Whites — perpetrated especially by young Black muggers — have been an ugly feature of multi-racial districts for years.

More than a decade ago Scotland Yard, reporting on the situation in Brixton, stated that 80 per cent of the muggers were Black, 80 per cent of their victims were White, that 70 per cent of the victims were women — of whom a fifth were aged over 60.

Pictured right is 24 year old Stephen Colville of Hackney. As he was walking home through Dalston on the night of Friday 10th July a car containing five Black men roared up and deliberately ran him over.

As the car sped away the occupants screamed with merriment. The Police are still hunting them.

THE EXPLOSION

MORNING RUBBLE

This old man has seen Britain through two World Wars and the Great Slump. He now wanders through the rubble of "a land fit for heroes to live in."

WHEN, where and by whom was the fuse lit which detonated the explosions of violence which rocked the multi-racial districts of English cities this year?

When: 2nd April 1980.

Where: St. Paul's, Bristol.

By Whom: The Chief Constable of Avon and Somerset, Mr. Brian Weigh; the Home Secretary Mr. William Whitelaw; the Attorney-General Sir Michael Havers; the Chairman of the Commission for Racial Equality Mr. David Lane; and mass media editors.

On 2nd April Police raided a cafe in St. Paul's, Bristol, where West Indians engaged in unlawful drinking and drug dealing. A mob of Blacks quickly congregated and began to riot.

POLICE WITHDRAWN

The response of the Chief Constable should have been to flood the area as quickly as possible with a large force in order to quell the riot.

Instead, he withdrew his men from the area for a period of seven hours, thereby abandoning law-abiding people and their property to the mercy of the mob.

The Chief Constable was clearly terrified of being depicted by the mass media as a 'racist oppressor' of Black people and so he opted for the course of "allowing the mob to exhaust itself" before re-asserting the rule of law.

This decision was endorsed by Home Secretary William Whitelaw. Later Whitelaw was to endorse other decisions by so-called "law enforcement" officers in respect of the Bristol riot which were to further undermine the rule of law.

"NOT RACIAL"

Before the Police had re-occupied St. Paul's the Chairman of the Community Relations Commission, Mr. David Lane, and numerous other 'Community Relations' spokesmen were rushed on to TV to declare:

"This is not a race riot. It is the inevitable outcome of Police harassment of the Black community and the high level of unemployment and bad housing to which Black people are subjected in inner-city areas. Britain's racist society is to blame!"

Many of the St. Paul's rioters who were arrested escaped conviction because (as Lord Denning later indicated) some of the Black people who served on juries showed a marked disinclination to find any Black accused guilty.

This subversion of justice was compounded by a decision of the Attorney-General, Sir Michael Havers, in the case of five alleged Black rioters who should have faced a re-trial following the inability of a jury to agree on a verdict.

CHARGES DROPPED

Instead of ordering a re-trial, Sir Michael ordered that the charges against the men be dropped "in the interests of good race relations." This decision was endorsed by William Whitelaw.

Game, set and match to the rioters!

All these events were watched with close interest by 'militant' elements among Black communities, in big cities throughout the land. What lessons did they learn?

Firstly, that large numbers of Black people can quickly congregate in 'ghetto' areas and that if they are aggressive enough they can quickly overwhelm all but the largest deployment of Police.

Secondly, that those in charge of the Police have become so bemused by considerations of 'Community Relations' and so worried about what the multi-racialist mass media might say of them — that they will hesitate to take decisive action against a determined mob comprised mainly of Black people.

RIOTING PROFITABLE

Thirdly, that senior government ministers and Crown officers are so desperate to avoid a crack-up of the multi-racial society (which they are responsible for constructing) that they will go to almost any length in order to placate a Black mob.

Fourthly, that no matter what crimes and mayhem are perpetrated by Black rioters, the mass media and leaders of the 'Race Relations Industry' will portray the rioters as victims, not as malefactors.

Fifthly, that riots are profitable — both in terms of goods that can be looted and in terms of cash aid that will be injected into riot-torn areas by government agencies.

In view of the riots which broke out in the Immigrant areas of so many other cities this year, who can deny that the lessons for the Black community of the riot at Bristol were not well learned?
